

CubeBrand — Giant Selfie Cubes For Events

A branded room people walk into and market for you.

What It Is

A rentable, branded "selfie cube" — a lightweight metal frame wrapped in custom-printed fabric that creates a small, enclosed photo room. Guests step inside, feel like they're in a private VIP studio, snap photos, and post them to Instagram, spreading the client's logo organically to thousands. You build and rent these cubes to brands, events, and venues as a content machine that beats a boring banner.

How It Makes Money

Per-event rental plus design fees. Brands, agencies, festivals, weddings, and stores pay you to deliver, set up, and break down a custom-wrapped cube for their event. Revenue stacks: rental day-rate, custom fabric printing markup, optional photographer/lighting add-on, and recurring deals with event-planning agencies who book you repeatedly. You can also sell cubes outright to brands that want a permanent one.

Startup Costs

- Modular aluminum/steel frame system (truss or pipe-and-drape, reusable): $600-$2,000 — Alibaba search "portable aluminum exhibition booth frame truss"
- Tension fabric printing (first 2-3 custom wraps): $300-$900
- Lighting kit (LED panels / ring lights): $200-$600
- Transport cases + dolly + hand tools: $200-$500
- Website, sample mockups, branding: $100-$400
- Liability insurance for events: $300-$800/yr
- Per-unit import note: a reusable frame kit lands around $500-$1,500 from China; fabric wraps are printed locally per client.
- Total to launch: ~$1,700-$4,500

The Numbers

- Reusable frame cost amortized + fabric print + labor per event: ~$150-$350
- Rent per event/day: $800-$2,500 (custom branded)
- Profit per booking: ~$600-$2,100
- 6-10 bookings/month × ~$1,000 avg profit = $6,000-$12,000/month
- Frame pays for itself in 1-2 bookings; every event after is mostly profit since the frame is reusable and only the fabric changes.

How To Start

1. Buy one modular frame kit and a simple lighting setup; assemble and time your setup/teardown.
2. Print one eye-catching demo wrap and shoot polished photos/Reels of people inside it.
3. Build a one-page site and a rate card (half-day, full-day, multi-day).
4. Pitch event planners, marketing agencies, and venues — they book repeat business.

5. Offer custom branding as the upsell: "Your logo, a private photo room, thousands of organic posts."
6. Deliver, set up, capture content of guests using it, and send the client a recap.
7. Reinvest into a second frame so you can run two events on the same weekend.

Where To Get Customers

- Event planners, marketing/experiential agencies, and venue managers (repeat buyers)
- Brand activations, product launches, trade shows, festivals, weddings
- Instagram/TikTok showing guests inside the cube and the organic reach it generated
- LinkedIn outreach to brand marketing managers
- Partner with photo-booth and AV-rental companies as an add-on offering

Pro Tips

- Sell the psychology, not the frame. Pitch "enclosed = private = irresistible to post" — that's why it outperforms a banner, and it justifies premium pricing.
- The frame is reusable; the fabric is the product. Keep frames standardized and only reprint wraps, so margins stay high across clients.
- Land one agency on retainer. A single busy event agency can fill your calendar — that beats chasing one-off bookings forever.
