

Tear-Off Sample Poster Marketing

Put the product ON the poster — let people try it, then do your advertising for free.

What It Is

A guerrilla product-launch marketing service (and method) where you print posters with free samples physically attached — small sachets, mini products, scratch-offs, or single-use samples — so passersby tear one off and try it on the spot. It's irresistibly filmable, dramatically lowers the barrier to trying a new product, and turns the street into a stage. Offer it as a done-for-you launch campaign to brands, or use it to launch your own product.

How It Makes Money

As a service: brands pay you to design, produce, and place sample-posters in high-traffic spots for product launches. Revenue is per-campaign packages (design + sample sourcing + placement + the content captured). As a method: you use it to launch your own product cheaply. Buyers are new CPG brands, food/beverage startups, cosmetics lines, and local businesses launching something people need to taste/feel to "get."

Startup Costs

- Poster design (Canva or a designer): $0–$200/campaign
- Large-format poster printing: $5–$25 per poster (bulk cheaper)
- Sample sachets/packaging (Alibaba): ~$0.05–$0.20/unit landed for sachets
- Adhesive/perforated tear-off attachment setup: $50–$150
- Filming gear (phone + gimbal): $0–$200
- GoHighLevel for client intake, proposals, invoicing: $100/month
- Business cards / portfolio site: $100
- Total to start: $300–$800 (service model, no inventory risk)

Alibaba sourcing (for the sample packaging side): search "custom sachet packaging" or "sample sachet bags" to source the small fillable pouches brands' samples go into.

The Numbers

- Cost per campaign delivered: posters + samples + labor ~$150–$500
- Sell price per campaign: $800–$3,000 (design + sourcing + placement + content deliverables)
- Profit per campaign: ~$500–$2,200
- Realistic monthly: 4 campaigns/month × $1,200 profit = ~$4,800/month; add a retainer for ongoing launches and content and push past $8k.

How To Start

1. Build one killer proof-of-concept campaign (even for a friend's product) and film the tear-off + try moment.
2. Package it as a service: "We launch your product with sample-posters people can't stop filming."
3. Create 2–3 pricing tiers (single location, multi-location, plus content package).
4. Source cheap sample sachets and a clean perforated/tear-off attachment method.

5. Pitch local food, beverage, and cosmetics startups — anything that needs to be tried to be understood.
6. Always capture vertical video of strangers trying it; deliver that footage as part of the package.
7. Get permission for poster placement (cafes, gyms, campuses, partner storefronts) to stay legit.

Where To Get Customers

- DM/email outreach to new CPG, food, and cosmetics brands
- Your own case-study Reels showing the tear-off campaigns going viral
- Local startup and small-business networking groups
- Marketing/agency referral partners who don't offer guerrilla/experiential
- LinkedIn outreach to brand and growth marketers at early-stage companies

Pro Tips

- The deliverable isn't the poster — it's the content; the footage of strangers trying the product is worth more to the brand than the foot traffic, so always sell the video as the centerpiece.
- Pick products that genuinely need to be experienced (taste, scent, texture); the method only works when "just trying it" instantly sells, so qualify clients on that.
- Always secure placement permission and easy-clean adhesive — getting posters torn down by property owners (or fined) kills a campaign and your reputation; partner with venues instead.